A Halyard and Capstan shanty, also a Forebitter (song)

A.L. Lloyd, 1957, CD Blow Boys Blow. wrote:

A fierce song, made to fit the rhythm of fast pulling and quick breathing. A 'drogher' was a ship in the West Indies sugar trade (etymology 17th century Dutch, so I'm told). The sail would need to be light, or the occasion desperate, for men to haul at the halyards to the beat of such a fast song as Bill Riley.

Stan Hugill, 1994, Shanties from the Seven Seas:

Billy Riley probably started life as a cotton-hoosiers' song, but at sea it was used at halyards. According to CF Smith it was known in Green's Blackwall ships about the 1850's.

The verses are mainly impromptu, about Little Jackie Riley, Missie Riley, Billy Riley's other occupations.

Miss Colcord [says] it has a different refrain for each stanza, Missus Riley, Missy Riley etc for Billy Riley.

C F Smith gives the refrain as Old Billy Riley O.

Sharp has one pull in the refrains on the last O.

About the Words

Dancing master - derogatory reference perhaps to a cushy job he had before he became a captain.

Drogher - small freight boat used in the West Indies to deliver sugar and rum to the merchantmen - or a vessel for transporting lumber or cotton or other goods to the coast.

Screw him up - tighten up. It may come from the use of Jack Screws, which were employed to stow cargo as tightly as possible below decks - usually cotton bales, but other bulky stuff as well.

Cheer'ly - quickly, with a will.

Could this be the Riley family?
