1. Was you ever in Quebec?
Stowin' timber on the deck
Where you'd break yer bleedin' neck
Riding on a donkey!

Way hey, away we go
Donkey riding, donkey riding,
Way hey, away we go
Riding on a donkey.

2. Was you ever in Timbuktu?
Where the gals are black and blue,
And they wriggle their arses, too,
Riding on a donkey. ...

3. Was you ever in Vallipo?
Where the gals put on a show,
Wriggle their arse with a roll and go

Screwin' cotton all the day?
A dollar a day is a white man's pay.

Where the men wear pigtails long,
And the gals play hong-ki-kong,

Donkey Riding

Notes:

A capstan shanty for loading cargo or lumber also a stow-away shanty. or a walk-away, runaway or stamp-and-go shanty!

Alternative Titles: Donkey riding, Riding on a donkey Was you ever in Quebec?

This version: common verses and my favourites

Hugill, Stan, 1994, Shanties of the Seven Seas says:

Donkey Riding was very popular among the timber droghers both in Liverpool and in Canadian ports, and was used as both a capstan and a runaway song when working cargo. [Hugill] got the song from Spike Sennett, who said it was just as popular at sea as in port.

Many work songs used by seamen and dockers to stow cargo (in particular lumber and cotton) were the same as those used for capstan and other jobs at sea.

Much improvisation was given to this song, and many indecent lines found in the regulation verses.

Notes on the words

Donkey - a donkey engine, used for loading and unloading cargo. But I can only find steam-powered donkey engines described.

"Dead Horse" on Mudcat.org writes: It is possible that Donkey Riding was an expression used by *proper seamen* to poke fun at those who used the donkey engine to do their work for them. This was turned around by those *lubbers* who loaded cargoes more quickly, got in & out of port sooner, so managed to keep their ships profitable, while the old die-hards found themselves *on the beach* and jobless.

Timbuktu - inland but it is on the River Niger.

Vallipo - Valparaiso is in Chile, here shortened by sailors to Vallipo. Can also be given five syllables as Vallaparaiso,

Screwing cotton - compressing it so more of it can be stowed the hold

Miramashee - Miramichi, river and port in New Brunswick, Canada, exporting timber until 1825 and had a dockyard 1773-1825.

More towns are given in other versions. The shantyman would make up as many as needed.
