Hugill, Stan, 1994, Shanties from the Seven Seas :

"Tom's (or John's) Gone to Hilo was a tops'l halyard song, and one which never found favour with the afterguard, as it took too long to hoist the yard to it on account of the slow and lethargic way in which it was sung by a good shanty man. It was rather difficult to sing correctly, but even so it was popular with the crowd, particularly for heavy lifts.

"... The place name Hilo – whether in Hawaii or Peru – is pronounced with a soft "i", but seamen always pronounced the soft i's in songs as "eye", e.g. Rio – Rye-O, California - Califor-nye-O, etc. Therefore Hilo was sung High low. ...

Hugill's version has 19 verses, starting

1. Tommy's gone, what shall I do?
Away, you Hee-lo-o-o
Tommy's gone, an' I'll go too!
Tom's gone to Hilo.

2. Tommy's gone to Hilo town
Where all them girls, they do come down.

3. Hilo town is in Peru
It's just the place for me an' you.

4. Tommy's gone to Liverpool ...

It goes on to name a range of destinations for Tom.

The present day Hilo is a large town on Hawaii while the Hilo referred to in the shanty is more likely to be 'Ilo' in Peru where many sailing ships went to load nitrates.
